

Eight strategies to support children with selective mutism

Selective mutism is a persistent failure to speak in specific social situations (e.g. at preschool or school), despite speaking fluently in familiar situations. You can read about it here: <http://bit.ly/MuteSelectively>.

So how can families, carers, educators, and others help children with selective mutism?

1. The Whole Child

Focus on what the child can do by developing their skills, talents and interests.

Value the child as a whole person - there is much more to life than just talking!

2. Exercise

Schedule regular physical exercise to help the child manage anxiety and to boost confidence.

3. Public vs Private

In private, acknowledge the child's achievements around talking.

In public, praise the child for other (non-talking) behaviours in the same way you would praise any other child.

4. Wait

Don't be too helpful!

Encourage the child to have a go, or think of ways to simplify tasks to increase success. Don't jump in and "save" children from opportunities to communicate for themselves.

5. Language

Help the child to see difficult tasks like talking as exciting challenges.

Change the language from 'can't' or 'won't', to 'can't yet'.

6. Mistakes are OK!

Normalise mistake-making!

Acknowledge and praise the child for trying new things regardless of outcomes. Encourage practice.

7. Communication

Welcome and respond to any kind of communication from the child, including gestures, nodding, drawing, making choices, or helping in different ways.

8. Build friendships

Help the child to build friendships by pairing them up with another child for unstructured play dates, or at preschool or school.
