His mother wanted Virginia to change her first name, a popular tradition in many South Asian Muslim cultures for convert wives. When she refused to change her name, Ben's mother grew upset, resorting to calling Virginia "Ben's Madame" for the first few years.⁹⁰ Religion proved to be the source of tension between Virginia and her mother-in-law. Virginia struggled to reconcile religious faith with the cultural traditions of a specifically IndoTrinidadian Islam. For instance, Virginia recounted how Ben would always tell her to cover her head in the kitchen or how she would always need to wear a certain length sleeve to the mosque.⁹¹ This tension strained her faith in Allah, as she had to inwardly work through external pressures placed on her relationship.
