

Positivism	Phenomenology	Blended approaches	Critical Social Science (e.g. Feminists)	Postmodernism
Use of scientific, quantitative methods as in the physical sciences: Uses inductive methodology, i.e. develops theory base on research data and findings	Humans are different from physical objects and require humanistic and qualitative methods: Uses deductive methodology, i.e. – proceeds with theory to tests it against the research data and findings	Questioned the dichotomy and advocated combination of the methods.	These want entirely new approach based on the methods of critical social science or postmodernism; Critical social science favours qualitative methods but not exclusively; Basically, critical social science links research with trying to transform society; therefore it rejects the views of many sociologists (positivists and phenomenologists alike) which advocate that researchers should be impartial. Instead, it sides with those it sees as disadvantage and oppressed;	These are the most recent; They tend to reject belief that research can ever discover some objective truth about the social world. Instead, they believe that all that can be done is to examine social world from viewpoint of the different actors & it, and to deconstruct or take apart existing explanations of society; They reject the clarity of traditional quantitative, qualitative and c
