Nearshore Marine Paleoclimatic Regions Increasing Zoogeographic Provinciality Molluscan Extinctions And Paleoshorelines California:

Nearshore Marine Paleoclimatic Regions, Increasing Zoogeographic Provinciality, Molluscan Extinctions, and Paleoshorelines, California Clarence A. Hall, 2002 Approximately 3000 middle and late Cenozoic nearshore marine molluscan taxa from western California are assigned to six time periods spanning 25 m y In this interdisciplinary study western California is palinspastically restored for each of the time periods by backsliding and back rotating large fault blocks or crustal units Marine fossil assemblages are assigned to nearshore paleoclimatic regions or water masses within palinspastically restored California In addition this volume reveals positive feedback mechanisms between paleolatitudinal changes in sea surface paleotemperature gradients and changes in the diversity of marine mollusks along the California coast through time defines equable based effective temperatures and analyzes extinction rates among macroinvertebrate marine taxa from coastal California and the possible causes of these extinctions The late Paleogene to Neogene faunas reflect an increase in faunal diversity related to strengthened temperature gradients greater extremes in sea surface temperatures reduction in temperateness and the development of an embayed California coastline A Case Study in Conservation

Science Milan Jovan Mitrovich, 2006 In a three part study we analyzed 1 population level response of the coachwhip snake Masticophis flagellum and striped racer M. lateralis to fragmentation of scrub habitats in coastal southern California using site occupancy models and presence apparent absence data 2 space use behavior of coachwhip snakes and racers in fragmented and continuous habitats of coastal southern California using data from radio telemetry and 3 phylogeography and population genetic variation throughout the range of both species with emphasis on coachwhip populations in southern California using mitochondrial DNA sequence and RFLP data Part 1 revealed disproportionate loss of coachwhip populations from fragmented areas Unlike the racer the coachwhip tended to be absent from sites embedded in isolated landscapes even at large spatial scales The two species showed large differences in rates of local extinction and probability of detection with coachwhip populations exhibiting variable rates of detection and greater likelihood of local extinction Habitat composition influenced site occupancy Coachwhip snakes preferred sites with open sage scrub and grassland Racers preferred scrub dominated sites In Part 2 coachwhip snakes exhibited great plasticity in spacing and movement patterns between sites showing large differences in movement response to changes in local conditions and amount of available space In sympatry coachwhip snakes and racers showed large differences in home range size rate of travel and movement distance with coachwhip snakes ranging more widely than racers Differences in habitat use fit well with occupancy patterns Coachwhip snakes utilized both scrub and grassland and racers utilized largely only scrub In Part 3 phylogenetic analyses recovered significant structure in both species with seven well supported and geographically coherent clades recovered from coachwhip populations sampled throughout the range of the species High density sampling within southern California recovered four cryptic coachwhip lineages in contact and organized geographically by bioregion Collectively results suggest the greater vulnerability of the coachwhip to land use change is related to differences in habitat use movement and rates of population turnover Unless the few remaining large contiguous landscapes of grassland and open scrubland are incorporated into regional conservation planning long term persistence of coachwhip lineages is unlikely in the future landscape of California

Phylogeography and Population Structure of the Tidewater Goby, Eucylogobius Newberryi (Teleostei: Gobiidae), Across Coastal California Dent Allan Earl, 2008 Forthcoming Books Rose Arny, 2002 The Zoological Record, 2003 Géochronique, 2003 Late Pleistocene Marine Paleoecology and Zoogeography in Central California Warren O. Addicott, 1966 Invertebrate assemblages analogous to the Aleutain molluscan province indicate a former cool temperate marine climate
