Among the many discussions to which the subject of madder has given rise among chemists there is none which is calculated to excite so much interest as that concerning the state in which the coloring matter originally exists in this root, and there is no part of this extensive subject which is at the same time involved in such obscurity. It is a well known fact that the madder root is not well adapted for the purpose of dyeing until it has attained a growth of from eighteen months to ~~two~~ ^{three} years, and that after being gathered and dried it gradually improves for several years after which it again deteriorates. During the time when left to itself, especially if in a state of powder, it increases in weight and bulk in consequence probably of absorption of moisture from the air, and some chemical change is effected, which though not attended by any striking phenomena is sufficiently well indicated by its results. There are few chemical investigations that have thrown any light on the nature of the process which takes place during the lapse of time, and in fact most of the attempts to do so have merely consisted of arguments based on analogy. It has been surmised that the process is one of oxidation, and that the access of atmospheric air is consequently necessary. We are indeed
