The ^AMind As a Scientific Object Christina E. Erneling, David M. Johnson, 2005-01-13 What holds together the various fields which considered together are supposed to constitute the general intellectual discipline that people now call cognitive science Some theorists identify the common subject matter as the mind but scientists have not been able to agree on any single satisfactory answer to the question of what the mind is This book argues that all cognitive sciences are not equal and that rather only neurophysiology and cultural psychology are suited to account for the mind's ontology

Consciousness in Philosophy and Cognitive Neuroscience Antti Revonsuo, Matti Kamppinen, 2013-06-17 Consciousness seems to be an enigmatic phenomenon it is difficult to imagine how our perceptions of the world and our inner thoughts sensations and feelings could be related to the immensely complicated biological organ we call the brain This volume presents the thoughts of some of the leading philosophers and cognitive scientists who have recently participated in the discussion of the status of consciousness in science The focus of inquiry is the question Is it possible to incorporate consciousness into science Philosophers have suggested different alternatives some think that consciousness should be altogether eliminated from science because it is not a real phenomenon others that consciousness is a real higher level physical or neurobiological phenomenon and still others that consciousness is fundamentally mysterious and beyond the reach of science At the same time however several models or theories of the role of conscious processing in the brain have been developed in the more empirical cognitive sciences It has been suggested that non conscious processes must be sharply separated from conscious ones and that the necessity of this distinction is manifested in the curious behavior of certain brain damaged patients This book demonstrates the dialogue between philosophical and empirical points of view The writers present alternative solutions to the brain consciousness problem and they discuss how the unification of biological and psychological sciences could thus become feasible Covering a large ground this book shows how the philosophical and empirical problems are closely interconnected From this interdisciplinary exploration emerges the conviction that consciousness can and should be a natural part of our scientific world view

Explanation and Integration in Mind and Brain Science David M. Kaplan, 2017-12-01 This collection brings together a set of new papers that advance the debate concerning the nature of explanation in mind and brain science and help to clarify the prospects for bonafide integration across these fields Long a topic of debate among philosophers and scientists alike there is growing appreciation that understanding the complex relationship between the psychological sciences and the neurosciences especially how their respective explanatory frameworks interrelate is of fundamental importance for achieving progress across these scientific domains Traditional philosophical discussions tend to construe the relationship between them in stark terms either they are related in terms of complete independence i e autonomy or complete dependence i e reduction leaving little room for more interesting relations such as that of mutually beneficial interaction or integration A unifying thread across the diverse set of contributions to this volume is the rejection of the assumption that no stable middle ground exists between these two extremes and common embrace of the idea that these sciences are partially dependent on or constrained by one another By addressing whether the explanatory patterns employed across these domains are similar or different in kind and to what extent they inform and constrain each another this volume helps to deepen our understanding of the prospects for successfully integrating mind and brain science

Intersensory Origin of Mind Thorne Shipley, 2013-02-01 In Intersensory Origin of Mind Thorne Shipley proposes a fundamental revision of the core of modern psychology With a serious respect for the history of science Shipley shows the profound limits of linear mechanistic and naively reductionistic accounts of the mind and proposes instead a sensory rationalist position which builds on the principles of emergent evolution Combining several diverse perspectives from the physiological optics of Helmholtz the perceptual science of Kohler the visual electrophysiology of Hubel Wiesel to the theories of Dewey Polanyi Cassirer Chomsky and Piaget
