The London Literary Gazette and Journal of Belles Lettres, Arts, Sciences, Etc, 1825 Of Mani, Marcion, and Bardaisan Saint Ephraim, Aeterna Press, I DESIRE to utter one more refutation against the three of them i e Marcion Mani and Bardaisan that is against Marcion in the first place who says that a heaven is found also beneath the Stranger Let us ask who bears up those heavens and what is in them For a power is necessary to bear them Or can it be that the heavens of the Stranger are resting on the heavens of the Maker so that he is the all sustaining Maker as indeed is the case But if they say that the heavens of the Stranger hang by the power of the Stranger we also will deal frowardly with the froward and say that he who is above the heavens cannot support the heavens but only if he were beneath them But if he is the same person who is above the heavens and below them it is clear that the place of his possessions is the same and in the midst of it are collected those Souls whom ISU brought up hence For a Supporter is required for those heavy Souls whom he brought up thence inasmuch as when his possessions are found enfolded within his bosom there is required for them another power which supports them Aeterna Press
