Speaking of Health Institute of Medicine, Board on Neuroscience and Behavioral Health, Committee on Communication for Behavior Change in the 21st Century: Improving the Health of Diverse Populations, 2002-12-11 We are what we eat That old expression seems particularly poignant every time we have our blood drawn for a routine physical to check our cholesterol levels And it is not just what we eat that affects our health Whole ranges of behaviors ultimately make a difference in how we feel and how we maintain our health Lifestyle choices have enormous impact on our health and well being But how do we communicate the language of good health so that it is uniformly received and accepted by people from different cultures and backgrounds Take for example the case of a 66 year old Latina She has been told by her doctor that she should have a mammogram But her sense of fatalism tells her that it is better not to know if anything is wrong To know that something is wrong will cause her distress and this may well lead to even more health problems Before she leaves her doctor's office she has decided not to have a mammogram that is until her doctor points out that having a mammogram is a way to take care of herself so that she can continue to take care of her family In this way the decision to have a mammogram feels like a positive step Public health communicators and health professionals face dilemmas like this every day Speaking of Health looks at the challenges of delivering important messages to different audiences Using case studies in the areas of diabetes mammography and mass communication campaigns it examines the ways in which messages must be adapted to the unique informational needs of their audiences if they are to have any real impact Speaking of Health looks at basic theories of communication and behavior change and focuses on where they apply and where they don't By suggesting creative strategies and guidelines for speaking to diverse audiences now and in the future the Institute of Medicine seeks to take health communication into the 21st century In an age where we are inundated by multiple messages every day this book will be a critical tool for all who are interested in communicating with diverse communities about health issues

Communicating to Advance the Public's Health Roundtable on Population Health Improvement, Board on Population Health and Public Health Practice, Institute of Medicine, Board on Population Health and Public Health Practice, 2015-12-31 The Institute of Medicine's Roundtable on Population Health Improvement brings together individuals and organizations that represent different sectors in a dialogue about what is needed to improve population health On September 22 2014 the roundtable held a workshop to discuss some of the science of health communication audiences and messaging and to explore what it will take to generate widespread awareness acceptance and action to improve health including through the entertainment media the news media and social media This report summarizes the presentations and discussion of the workshop

Health Communication Rosemary M. Caron, 2015
