

Medieval Philosophy

Patristics and Scholasticism

Medieval philosophy is the name given to the period from the fall of the Roman Empire in the West (476) to the capture of Constantinople by the Turks (1453).

It is a long period characterized by important historical, social, political, cultural and scientific events. On the cultural level, the West loses knowledge of the Greek language and a large part of the ancient scientific philosophical legacy. From the hand of the Church begins the construction of a Christian sapientia unitary with Christian dogma, the beginning and end of reflection.

Features

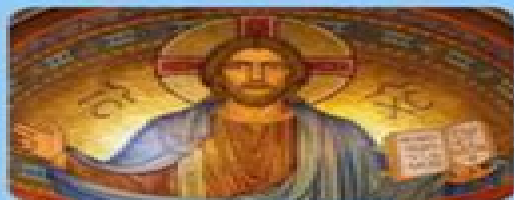

Medieval philosophy is characterized mainly by its attempt to reconcile Christian (but also Jewish and Islamic) doctrines with the philosophy inherited from classical antiquity. It is divided into:

Patristic Philosophy

Patristics is the phase in the history of Christian organization and theology that spans from the end of early Christianity, with the consolidation of the New Testament canon, until around the eighth century. In addition to the progressive elucidation of Christian dogma, patristics was concerned above all with the interpretations that would later give rise to heresies.

apologia or defense of Christianity against pagan religions, first and the successive heterodox
