Nature Behind Barbed Wire Connie Y. Chiang,2018-08-02 The mass imprisonment of over 110 000 people of Japanese ancestry during World War II was one of the most egregious violations of civil liberties in United States history Removed from their homes on the temperate Pacific Coast Japanese Americans spent the war years in desolate camps in the nation s interior Photographers including Ansel Adams and Dorothea Lange visually captured these camps in images that depicted the environment as a source of both hope and hardship And yet the literature on incarceration has most often focused on the legal and citizenship statuses of the incarcerated their political struggles with the US government and their oral testimony Nature Behind Barbed Wire shifts the focus to the environment It explores how the landscape shaped the experiences of both Japanese Americans and federal officials who worked for the War Relocation Authority WRA the civilian agency that administered the camps The complexities of the natural world both enhanced and constrained the WRA s power and provided Japanese Americans with opportunities to redefine the terms and conditions of their confinement Even as the environment compounded their feelings of despair and outrage the incarcerated also found that their agency in transforming and adapting to the natural world could help them survive and contest their incarceration Japanese Americans and WRA officials negotiated the terms of confinement with each other and with a dynamic natural world Ultimately as Connie Chiang demonstrates the Japanese American incarceration was fundamentally an environmental story
