Okeyo,Fredah Maina,Job Maguta Kihara,2011-08-30 Africa can achieve self sufficiency in food production through adoption of innovations in the agriculture sector Numerous soil fertility and crop production technologies have been generated through research however wide adoption has been low African farmers need better technologies more sustainable practices and fertilizers to improve and sustain their crop productivity and to prevent further degradation of agricultural lands The agricultural sector also needs to be supported by functional institutions and policies that will be able to respond to emerging challenges of globalization and climate change Global Trends A.

Resource Management Keijiro Otsuka, Frank M. Place,2001-08-14 The devastating environmental effects of deforestation and the exploitation of other natural resources in the developing world have been well documented yet their impact on local communities has received far less attention This volume fills this gap by looking at how land degradation and deforestation are being addressed at the local level where households have experienced the reduction of farm size and the decline of natural resources Through a comparison of Asia and Africa Land Tenure and Natural Resource Management examines the evolution of land tenure institutions within diverse cultural natural and policy environments Specific topics include the evolution of customary land tenure the impacts of land tenure policies and common property management The editors conclude that the best strategy for managing land and forest resources lies in promoting the establishment of property rights and investment in the improvement of the natural resource base Topics Include Issues and Theoretical Framework

Agriculture Organization of the United Nations,2019-10-14 The need to reduce food loss and waste is firmly embedded in the 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development Food loss and waste reduction is considered important for improving food security and nutrition promoting environmental sustainability and lowering production costs However efforts to reduce food loss and waste will only be effective if informed by a solid understanding of the problem This report provides new estimates of the percentage of the world s food lost from production up to the retail level The report also finds a vast diversity in existing estimates of losses even for the same commodities and for the same stages in the supply chain Clearly identifying and understanding critical loss points in specific supply chains where considerable potential exists for reducing food losses is crucial to deciding on appropriate measures The report provides some guiding principles for interventions based on the objectives being pursued through food loss and waste reductions be they in improved economic efficiency food security and nutrition or environmental sustainability

Farmers' grain storage and losses in Ethiopia: Measures and associates Bachewe, Fantu Nisrane,Minten, Bart,Taffesse, Alemayehu Seyoum,Pauw, Karl,Cameron, Alethia,Endaylalu, Tirsit Genye,2018-03-09 Storage losses at the farm are often assumed to be an important contributor to presumed large postharvest losses in developing countries However reliable and representative data on these losses are often lacking We study farmers storage decisions and self reported storage losses for grain based on two recent large scale household surveys conducted in major agricultural areas in Ethiopia We show that a relatively large share of grain production is stored by farm households themselves mainly for own consumption and that storage technologies are rudimentary We find that farmers self reported storage losses amount to an average of 4 percent of all grain stored and 2 percent of the total harvest These storage losses are shown to differ significantly by socio economic variables and wealth but also by crop and humidity We further see strong spatial heterogeneity in storage losses being significantly higher in the southwestern part of the country Efforts to scale up the adoption of improved storage technologies to reduce storage losses at the farm level should take into consideration these characteristics
