

OTC COUNSELING QUESTIONS

Counseling patients about self-care and nonprescription drugs is not the same and cannot follow the same procedure as for prescription drugs. That is why OTC counseling requires much more exploratory open or close-ended questions on the part of the pharmacist which are especially useful to clarify information gathered about the patient's condition. It allows gathering the most abundant amount of information.

These questions usually start with who, what, how, why or where. For example:

- "Which of the prescription medications do you take on regular basis?"
- "Which of the nonprescription and herbal medications do you use?"
- "What types of conditions do you routinely see your doctor for?"
- Some other questions are also possible:
- "Have you ever experienced any side effects after taking the OTC medication?"
- "Have you taken this OTC medication before?"
