Redefining Urban and Suburban America Bruce Katz, Robert E. Lang, 2004-05-13 The early returns from Census 2000 data show that the United States continued to undergo dynamic changes in the 1990s with cities and suburbs providing the locus of most of the volatility Metropolitan areas are growing more diverse especially with the influx of new immigrants the population is aging and the make up of households is shifting Singles and empty nesters now surpass families with children in many suburbs The contributors to this book review data on population race and ethnicity and household composition provided by the Census s short form and attempt to respond to three simple queries Are cities coming back Are all suburbs growing Are cities and suburbs becoming more alike Regional trends muddy the picture Communities in the Northeast and Midwest are generally growing slowly while those in the South and West are experiencing explosive growth Warm dry places grew Cold wet places declined note two authors Some cities are robust others are distressed Some suburbs are bedroom communities others are hot employment centers while still others are deteriorating And while some cities cores may have been intensely developed including those in the Northeast and Midwest and seen population increases the areas surrounding the cores may have declined significantly Trends in population confirm an increasingly diverse population in both metropolitan and suburban areas with the influx of Hispanic and Asian immigrants and with majority populations of central cities for the first time being made up of minority groups Census 2000 also reveals that the overall level of black to nonblack segregation has reached its lowest point since 1920 although high segregation remains in many areas Redefining Urban and Suburban America explores these demographic trends and their complexities along with their implications for the policies and politics shaping metropolitan America The shifts discussed here have significant influence
