New Zealand. Parliament

Maori and Parliament Maria Bargh, 2015 New Zealand is at a watershed in its constitutional and political arrangements. There are three events looming in the short term which suggest that the status of M ori in Parliament is in for significant challenge. The first is the impending review of constitutional issues and the M ori seats as part of the National Party M ori Party Relationship and Confidence and Supply Agreement. Secondly, the proposed referendum on the future of the mixed member proportional system MMP could also have significant implications for M ori. Finally, the longer term question of whether New Zealand should become a republic continues to haunt New Zealand's political imagination and would also necessitate lengthy debates about the place of New Zealand's constitutional arrangements in relation to M ori rights and Te Tiriti o Waitangi. M ori and Parliament provides a comprehensive and enlightening context for understanding both the historical and contemporary relationship between M ori and Parliament and highlights many of the issues which would arise in any discussion of New Zealand constitutional reform.
