

to embrace a national skepticism more characteristic of the Viennese literati. In a piece that begins with an historical overview of the concept of Central Europe, Jacques Le Rider examines its meaning in the writing of Hugo von Hofmannsthal. It is unfortunate that Margaret Olin's piece on the Viennese art historian Alois Riegl lacks the historical context that would make its intriguing material more meaningful.

The last section of the volume is devoted to the post-Habsburg environment, beginning with Marsha Rozenblit's workman-like presentation of the impact of World War I on the empire's middle and upper class Jews, especially those in Vienna. Edward Timms examines the concept of citizenship based on Heimatrecht in the new Austrian state, highlighting how increasingly exclusionary interpretations of this term affected the Jewish population. Anton Pelinka presents the mostly failed efforts of the corporative state under Dollfuss and Schussnigg to invent a new Austrian identity strong enough to resist the lure of Reich German nationalism, while Robert Knight looks at similar, and more successful, efforts undertaken by various Education Ministers after World War II. Peter Alter concludes the volume with a smoothly written piece on the evolution of the nation-state and its prospects in the European Union of the future.

In contrast with the flood of recent and often repetitive literature intended to enlighten Western readers about East European nationalisms, this volume's insightful essays offer new and refreshing perspectives on the phenomenon useful both to area specialists and students of nationalism.

Richard B. Spence and Linda L. Nelson, eds, Scholar, Patriot, Mentor: Historical Essays in Honor of Dimitrije Djordjevic. Boulder, CO: East European Monographs, 1992.

Professor Dimitrije Djordjevic, known as Mita to his numerous friends, was certainly a scholar as demonstrated by the contributions by Wayne Vucinich and Jelisaveta Stanojevich Allen. I vividly remember a discussion at the 1965 Congress of the World Historical Association in Vienna, where an entire session was devoted to his Revolutions Nationales des Peuples Balkaniques, 1804-1914, a rare honor indeed. I highlight this one work, but many others could be mentioned. Prof. Djordjevic's mastery of languages made him a true scholar of the entire Balkans and, to a considerable extent, also of the Austro-Hungarian Empire.

Patriot is his second accomplishment as mentioned in this volume's title. It is well deserved. Scion of a distinguished Serbian family, Professor Djordjevic enlisted in the Chetnik forces during World War II. Captured by the Germans he wound up in Mauthausen concentration camp and, subsequently, in one of Tito's jails as an anti-communist. Nevertheless, he remained for his entire life a loyal Serb and a good Yugoslav. (The events of the last few years must be a true personal tragedy for him.)

The first contribution to Part I of the volume deals with his life. The final chapter of Part I lists the advanced degrees students at the University of California at Santa
