It is noted to white and red, black has purifying properties. For example, the body of a woman that was recently widowed will be coloured black with machete, the funeral people of the soul play her through coffee (see Schwartz 1995, see also Kemp 1997, Imparato 1997). She will also wear clothes that are black with dust. On the other hand, black may also be viewed as neutral - as absence of heat - and hence it is associated with women just maturing among the young.

In many instances, the uses of these different colours are linked with other symbolic actions as well, such as medication, tattooing, shaving the head, cutting hair into a specific style, and wearing specific costumes made for the occasion (Fig. 4, 5). For example, one only would a woman wear machete cutting, but she would shave her hair into a specific style. A dancer would prepare a number of amulets for her to wear and treat her with medicines - to cleanse her as well as for future protection. Furthermore, certain actions and rituals such as touching of water and making of clay pots are forbidden, and she has to avoid all public gatherings of people. It is only after a period of approximately one year, when certain cleansing rituals are performed, that she is set free from these constraints. These type of actions, in its specific
