Comics and other graphic narratives powerfully represent embodied experiences that are difficult to express in language. A group of authors from various countries and disciplines explore the unique capacity of graphic narratives to represent human embodiment as well as the relation of human bodies to the worlds they inhabit. Using works from illustrated scientific texts to contemporary comics across national traditions, we discover how the graphic narrative can shed new light on everyday experiences. Essays examine topics that are easily recognized as anchored in the body as well as experiences like migration and concepts like environmental degradation and compassion that emanate from or impact on our embodied states. Graphic Embodiments is of interest to scholars and students across various interdisciplinary fields including comics studies, gender and sexuality studies, visual and cultural studies, disability studies, and health and medical humanities. If you've recently graded middle school or high school writing, chances are you've read terms like these or my favorite wtf, idk, which also happened to be an answer on a student's quiz As a middle school English teacher I became more and more perplexed to see students using texting talk on their homework and classroom writing assignments not to mention answers on the writing portion of the state standardized test My students were not differentiating appropriate writing contexts The answers written on the unit test were written the same way that they invited their friends to hang Starbucks How do we as educators and parents allow students to creatively express themselves support them academically and prepare them for a professional world built on written and verbal communication Herein lies this text Hopefully it will alleviate the concerns of those who are worried about the disintegration of the English language and help those ISO in search of strategies to support textspeaking learners
