Thomas,2022-10-03 This open access book empowers its readers to explore the acoustic world of animals By listening to the sounds of nature we can study animal behavior distribution and demographics their habitat characteristics and needs and the effects of noise Sound recording is an efficient and affordable tool independent of daylight and weather and recorders may be left in place for many months at a time continuously collecting data on animals and their environment This book builds the skills and knowledge necessary to collect and interpret acoustic data from terrestrial and marine environments Beginning with a history of sound recording the chapters provide an overview of off the shelf recording equipment and analysis tools including automated signal detectors and statistical methods audiometric methods acoustic terminology quantities and units sound propagation in air and under water soundscapes of terrestrial and marine habitats animal acoustic and vibrational communication echolocation and the effects of noise This book will be useful to students and researchers of animal ecology who wish to add acoustics to their toolbox as well as to environmental managers in industry and government Animal Communication and Noise Henrik Brumm,2013-12-16 The study of animal communication has led to significant progress in our general understanding of motor and sensory systems evolution and speciation However one often neglected aspect is that signal exchange in every modality is constrained by noise be it in the transmission channel or in the nervous system This book analyses whether and how animals can cope with such constraints and explores the implications that noise has for our understanding of animal communication It is written by leading biologists working on different taxa including insects fish amphibians lizards birds and mammals In addition to this broad taxonomic approach the chapters also cover a wide array of research disciplines from the mechanisms of signal production and perception to the behavioural ecology of signalling the evolution of animal communication and conservation issues This volume promotes the integration of the knowledge gained by the diverse approaches to the study of animal communication and at the same time highlights particularly interesting fields of current and future research

New Therapies to Prevent or Cure Auditory Disorders Sylvie Pucheu, Kelly E. Radziwon, Richard Salvi, 2020-03-25 Hearing loss is the most common form of sensory impairment in humans affecting 360 million persons worldwide In parallel tinnitus disorder the perception of a phantom sound often described as a ringing or buzzing affects around 10-15% of the general population and interferes with daily life Hyperacusis defined as a hypersensitivity to moderate intensity sounds often co-occurs with tinnitus suggesting a common mechanism of dysfunction for these two perceptual disorders Whereas some drug candidates are in the process of being developed nowadays no effective treatment exists to cure hearing loss and tinnitus The topic of this book was selected with the goal of emphasizing mechanisms that induce hearing loss and tinnitus which lead the selection of promising targets for hearing disorder treatment Hair cells HC are the sensory cells of the inner ear required for both auditory and vestibular functions in all vertebrates HC are progressively lost during ageing and they are in addition sensitive to physical and acoustic traumas infectious diseases and chemicals present in commonly used treatments such as anticancer antimalarial or antibiotics As adult mammals including humans cannot regenerate dead HC all the possible injury could result in irreversible and permanent hearing loss It has been shown however that a limited capacity to regenerate HC exists in mouse at an early stage of development The regenerative capacity of HC then appears simply repressed in adult mammals and one could expect it will be possible to re-activate it with an appropriate therapeutic approach which is still to be defined Immune-mediated inner ear disease has been introduced and accepted as one SNHL pathophysiology it responds to immunosuppressive therapy and is one of the few reversible forms of bilateral SNHL Macrophages are always present in the spiral ligament of the lateral wall and are activated in response to various types of stimuli including noise exposure ischemia mitochondrial damage and surgical stress Recent studies have also revealed another type of immune cell called perivascular melanocyte-like macrophages PVMs in the stria vascularis The book will include a review of inflammatory immune cells in the cochlear lateral wall the pathways involved in cochlear damage and their potential as therapeutic targets The final chapter provides an overview of current animal model of tinnitus and hyperacusis Nowadays no effective treatment exists to cure tinnitus and hyperacusis One major obstacle arises from the fact that tinnitus is a subjective phenomenon the only possible diagnosis relies on self-reports of the subjects The main constraint of the use of animal models is the subjective character of tinnitus This chapter describes the advancement in animal models which play an important role in revealing the underlying mechanisms and treatment for tinnitus and hyperacusis
