Scheduling Under Resource Constraints Deterministic Models Jacek Blazewicz, 1986 A General Framework Integrating Techniques for Scheduling Under Uncertainty Julien Bidot, 2005 The research literature about task planning and scheduling under uncertainty comprises a large number of models resolution techniques and systems and it is difficult to compare them with existing terminologies However we have identified three general families of approaches that can be used to structure the literature based on the way decisions are taken In addition we propose a generation and execution model for scheduling under uncertainty that integrates these three families of approaches This model is an automaton that develops when the current schedule is no longer executable or when some particular conditions are met The third part of this thesis concerns our experimental study On top of ILOG Solver and Scheduler we have implemented a software prototype in C directly instantiated from our generation and execution model We present new probabilistic scheduling problems and a constraint based approach combined with simulation to solve some instances thereof
