School Builders:

Sunday School Builders John M. Somerndike, 1921 School Builders Eleanor Curtis, 2003-03-28 Educational policies and trends are continually changing and consequently design briefs for school buildings are also in a constant state of flux. School Builders introduces 29 school projects from across the globe each of which bears testimony to the many changes affecting school buildings. Through these projects the book also presents a number of pressing and sensitive issues relevant to architects, school governors and anyone else involved in school design. Representing the work of an international range of architects, the featured buildings cover a wide range of briefs from the technology led classroom to the sustainable green school, from the tight urban site to wide expansive fields, from the small to the large, from children's involvement to the community's involvement, from state to private and from safety and security to freedom and horizons. Within this range of issues, new technologies emerge as the main driving force behind the most rapid changes in school design. Technology has allowed schools and learning to change in terms of both the physical space and the type of activity taking place within it. School buildings must therefore offer more and more flexibility in their design; they need to be able to accommodate potential changes concerning technology, demographics, sustainability policies, urban regeneration, safety and security and all within mostly public budgets and on top of this to do so using creative design solutions. The buildings featured here will offer inspiration to anyone seeking to tackle these complex issues of school architecture.

The Builder, 1910 Carpenter Peter James McGuire, Frank Duffy, 1926 Education Unbound Frederick M. Hess, 2010-07-13 What if it's the system that's the problem? What if the key to breakthrough school improvement is not mandating new solutions built on an elusive combination of the right standards, pedagogy and assessments but removing entrenched bureaucratic barriers and rethinking restrictive norms and routines? What if we were free to start from scratch? This is the greenfield reform strategy: Create an environment that invites new solutions to surface and provide the infrastructure necessary for them to succeed. In Education Unbound: The Promise and Practice of Greenfield Schooling Frederick M. Hess advocates for an entrepreneurial approach focused on supporting outstanding teaching and learning. Sharing the examples of organizations whose bold alternative strategies represent promising shifts in K-12 education, Hess builds a case for school systems marked by data on performance and productivity and compelled to compete on cost and quality. Personnel policies designed to attract, retain and reward teachers and leaders committed to excellence. Education funding configured to support new ventures and foster creative problem solving. The goal, Hess argues, ought not to be the creation of a new best system but schools capable of evolving with the students and society they serve. Education Unbound is a catalyst for conversation and change and a must read for practitioners, policymakers, education entrepreneurs and anyone committed to school excellence and the next steps in education reform.

Foster City The Foster City Historical Society, 2005 Many of California's cities evolved haphazardly, the natural but disorderly result of an early settlement expanding over time. Foster City, on the other hand, is an example of a community that was carefully envisioned and built according to a master plan The city was conceived in the 1950s when real estate developer T Jack Foster and his sons began the arduous task of preparing tidal mudflats on the San Francisco Bay s shore to support a series of roads housing developments industrial parks and a picturesque but functional system of lagoons Through the years Foster City has risen from these humble beginnings to become a major Bay Area city one that is home to 30 000 diverse residents and several important corporations
