Search For A Negotiated Settlement Of Th:

The failures of peace; the search for a negotiated peace during the first world war, by Kent Forster Kent Forster,1920 Resolving Development Disputes Through Negotiations Timothy J. Sullivan,2012-12-06 In the last decade disputes between developers and local communities over proposed construction projects have led to increasing litigation. Environmental legislation in particular has greatly enhanced the rights and powers of organized groups that desire to participate in local development decisions. These powers have allowed citizen groups to block undesired and socially unacceptable projects such as highways through urban areas and sprawling suburban developments. At the same time these powers have produced a collective inability to construct many needed projects that produce adverse local impacts. Prisons, airports, hospitals, waste treatment plants and energy facilities all face years of litigation before a final decision. At times prolonged litigation has produced especially high costs to all participants. Despite these new powers, citizen action has often been limited to participation in public hearings or adjudicatory proceedings. Typically this occurs so late in the decision process that citizen input has very little effect in shaping a project's design. Those who dislike some element of a project often have little choice other than to oppose the entire project through litigation.
