

Heads Up to Clinicians:

Updated Mild Traumatic Brain Injury Guideline for Adults

A part of CDC's "Heads Up" Series

This Guideline is based on the 2008 Mild TBI Clinical Policy for adults, which revises the previous 2002 Clinical Policy. To help improve diagnosis, treatment, and outcomes for patients with mild TBI, it is critical that you become familiar with this guideline. The guideline is especially important for clinicians working in hospital-based emergency care.

Inclusion Criteria: This guideline is intended for patients with non-penetrating trauma to the head who present to the ED within 24 hours of injury, who have a Glasgow Coma Scale (GCS) score of 14 or 15 on initial evaluation in the ED, and are ≥ 16 years old.

Exclusion Criteria: This guideline is not intended for patients with penetrating trauma or multisystem trauma who have a GCS score of < 14 on initial evaluation in the ED and are < 16 years old.

Please turn over. ►

What You Need to Know:

This guideline provides recommendations for determining which patients with a known or suspected mild TBI require a head CT and which may be safely discharged.

Here are a few important points to note:

- There is no evidence to recommend the use of a head MRI over a CT in acute evaluation.
- A noncontrast head CT is indicated in head trauma patients with loss of consciousness or posttraumatic amnesia in presence of specific symptoms.
- A noncontrast head CT should be considered for head trauma patients with no loss of consciousness or post-traumatic amnesia in presence of specific symptoms.
- Even without a loss of consciousness or amnesia, a patient could still have an intracranial injury. Identifying those patients at risk is key.
- A patient with an isolated mild TBI and a negative CT is at minimal risk for developing an intracranial lesion and may be safely discharged.
- Discuss discharge instructions with patients and give them a discharge instruction sheet to take home and share with their family and/or caregiver. Be sure to:
 - Alert patients to look for postconcussive symptoms (physical, cognitive, emotional, and sleep) since onset of symptoms may not occur until days after the initial injury.
 - Instruct patients on what to expect, what to watch for, and when it is important to return immediately to the emergency department.
 - Emphasize that getting plenty of rest and sleep is very important after a concussion, as it helps the brain to heal. Patients should gradually return to their usual routine only after they start to feel better.
 - Inform patients to visit CDC's website at www.cdc.gov/Concussion.
