Gifford, Linda C. Wing, 2012-12-06

Bernard R Gifford and Linda C Wing Standardized testing has become a ubiquitous feature of American life As a major source of information for reducing uncertainty in the allocation of merit based educational training and employment opportunities testing affects the life chances of individuals Moreover testing influences the way in which our society judges itself and provides for our collective future Test scores may determine a child's admission to kindergarten and promotion to the first grade Most states award the high school diploma only if a student has passed a minimum competency test Major institutions of higher education typically require applicants to supplement their records of academic achievement with scores on college admissions tests In the labor market as a condition of employment or assignment to training programs more and more employers are requiring workers to sit for personnel selection tests Additionally it has become commonplace to use test scores to calibrate our national sociopolitical condition and our capacity to compete with other countries in the global economy In short with increasing frequency and intensity scores on examinations that purport to be objective and precise measures of individual knowledge abilities and potential are playing a critical role in the opportunity marketplace Similarly test scores are exercising growing influence in assessments of our social and economic institutions and in policy decisions about the relative investments that should be made in each In all these instantiations test scores are at the center of high stakes decision making about the future of individuals and of the nation itself

The Impact of Community Embeddedness on Turnover Sharon Gibson Heilmann, 2005 This dissertation tested the effects of community embeddedness on predicting turnover decisions of members of an organization characterized by frequent relocation and limited discretionary organizational exit The theoretical premise was that the organization's members would value the links and fit to their community such that thoughts of leaving or actually leaving the organization would be lessened by their desire to remain enmeshed in their communities Community embeddedness was believed to account for significant incremental variance beyond that of job satisfaction organizational commitment job search and job alternatives in predicting turnover of members of the U S Air Force using an archival data set The moderating effects of perceptions of career plateauing perceived occupational portability and occupational commutability on intent to turnover and actual turnover also were tested but no significant findings resulted The author confirmed that community embeddedness did increase the prediction of actual turnover when considered in conjunction with turnover intentions but community embeddedness did not increase the prediction of intent to turnover Results suggested that reconsideration of process models of turnover that identify intent to turnover as the direct antecedent of actual turnover is necessary to evaluate the proper alignment of community embeddedness within the models Theoretical refinement is necessary to refine the boundary conditions of community embeddedness
