Moral Reason Julia Markovits,2014-03-07 What is it to have a reason to do something is one sort of question what is it we have reason to do is another These questions are often explored separately But our answers to them may not be independent what reasons are may have implications for what reasons there are So the door is opened to a troubling tension the account of what reasons are that is most plausible in its own right could entail a view of what we have reason to do that is independently implausible In fact it looks like this is the case In the first half of Moral Reason Julia Markovits develops and defends a version of a desire based internalist account of what normative reasons are But does that account entail that there are no moral reasons that apply to all of us regardless of what we happen to desire It may look obvious that it does that a bullet must be bitten somewhere If what we have reason to do depends on what we antecedently desire corrected only for misinformation and procedural irrationalities and if desires differ from person to person there seems to be no basis for assuming that everyone has reason to be moral But the bullet may yet be avoided In the second half of the book Markovits shows how we may do so building on Kant s argument for his formula of humanity to provide an internalist defense of universal moral reasons In doing so she provides a more satisfying answer to the age old question why be moral
