

CHEM 211 Organic Chemistry I with Laboratory

See the course's website with 2 Semesters of Organic Chemistry Labs Manual Laboratory protocols and

Course Description

In CHEM211, laboratory students will investigate the trends of organic chemistry while studying various reactions and a wide range of laboratory techniques and instruments.

Students will become familiar with the nomenclature and structure of organic functional groups through reactions and instrumental analysis. Various reactions including nucleophilic substitution, elimination, and carbonyl addition will be used to synthesize new compounds from starting materials.

Students will be able to utilize a variety of instruments, including IR (Infrared spectrum, solvent), spectroscopy and GC (gas chromatography) mass spectrometry, to determine the success of their reactions. Traditional organic laboratory techniques such as TLC (Thin layer chromatography) column chromatography, extraction and fractional distillation will also be used.

Students will be given the opportunity to work on two projects in the course of the lab. Working with a partner, each student represents a chemical laboratory, and synthesizes compounds from physical property data (melting points, boiling points, IR and spectra, GC, MS, and determination of IR and GC and mass spectra). Students will be asked to design a synthesis sequence to start from given starting materials that will be passed through the sequence. The purpose of this experiment is for the student to design a synthesis and know if their synthesis will be approved experimentally. After running their experiments, the student will be asked to not synthesize compounds that require reagents more than five experiments to give them more information about their organic synthesis.

Prerequisite: 101 or 101L or permission of the department

Co-requisite: Physics with Physical Science

Semester Fall, Spring, Summer

Units 3.00

Lab 1: TLC Analysis of Analgesic Drugs
