

Birth, we are told, is a painful process – the entrance of Post-Punk experimentalists Eyeless In Gaza into this world was no exception to this rule; there were to be no silver spoons-in-mouths for Martyn Bates and Peter Becker... the journey from their vinyl single on their own Ambivalent Scale label (paired together in true bedroom style), through a long, fruitful association with indie power Cherry Red and back once more to A.S. has paralleled the lives of so many of us... pain, joy, optimism, disappointment, elation, success, failure and all stations inbetween. And their chosen passage through life, as varied as their explorations of vastly differing styles of music, is reflected in the inward, starkly personal lyrics that Martyn Bates has written for the group.

Martyn Bates could be likened to a human firework display – all emotions shooting skyward through poetry and musicianship, held back from chaotic disaster, controlled and monitored by the ever-pragmatic Peter Becker. But the fires of one very personal human experience are given a new and different lease of life here, within this selected collection of lyrics. Without the heartfelt howls and conspiratorial whispers that rage and demand inside the unique strictures of Bates' 'reconstructed vocalisations/eyeless', clarifying music, the strength of the poetry begs the reader to delve into themselves to discover meanings. The urgency of the poetry begs the reader to spit out by a much younger man, could be judged back then in the light of their onstage performances... you could buy an Eyeless single fresh off the press in the morning, and by that night's performance discover it had long been discarded from the live set. Who would dare do that, when every other contemporary band fought hard to create an audience-pleasing set? Madness it was, maybe, but a divine madness, a race to express oneself which sacrifices convention in its urgency to share experience with the world, to communicate thoughts & feelings through the loathen medium of words.

And, yet, in seeming marked contrast, the later writing evades an intoxicating air that is both reflective and questioning, mapping out a questing search towards an idiosyncratic, undefined, obliquely personal kind of spirituality/salvation that is both compelling and convincing... manifestly a continuation of earlier precedents, albeit deploying markedly different routes. Within Plague Of Years lies a singularly personal body of work, often both Imagist and Transcendentalist in its flavour and intent – whilst – not unsurprisingly perhaps – remaining persuasively analogous to the myriad music that Eyeless evoked. And that music is miraculously, seductively caught and conveyed here, measured and mirrored within the thirst and quiet fire of all this captured prose, held fast inside all of these wandering words of songs, inside all of those poems that were never meant to be poems. Here, upon pages that were never intended to be, laid out before you rained within a conundrum of labyrinthine puzzles and melodies, is a silent body of song... to perhaps explore, to perhaps unravel awhile within... and perhaps, miraculously unspool and solve... to sleep none of us to let them sing.
