Safety And Health In Coal Minesilo552 An Ilo Code Of Practice:

Code of Practice on Safety and Health for Coal Mines ,1985 Code of practice on occupational safety and occupational health in coal mining covers duties of coal miners and managers means of access and egress dust and fire hazards transport within mines construction techniques for supports electrical equipment occupational accident and occupational disease reporting systems etc Draft Code of Practice on Safety and Health in Underground Coalmines International Labour Organization. Sectoral Activities Programme,2006 Safety and Health in Coal Mines International Labour Office,International Labour Organisation. Coal Mines Committee,1976 Conference paper reporting on the current situation with regard to occupational safety and occupational health in coal mining surveys problems practices and trends Selected bibliography pp 125 to 128 and statistical tables Conference held in Geneva 1976 April 28 to May 6 Safety and Health in Underground Coalmines ,2009 This code of practice on safety and health in underground coalmines reflects the many changes in the industry and its workforce as well as new developments in occupational safety and health policies and ILO instruments on occupational safety and health A leaner multi skilled workforce new technology and less prescriptive more systems oriented approach to addressing safety and health are also reflected in this code The code sets out a national framework that specifies the roles of the competent authorities employers workers and their organizations It also comprises a methodology for identifying hazards preventing and minimizing risks as well as specific provisions for safe underground coalmining operations These specific provisions address most of the currently identified hazards and risks associated with underground coalmining When used in conjunction with the code s methodology for hazard identification risk assessment and control process these provisions represent current best practice As the same time the code is drafted in a way not to inhibit the development of new technologies better practice or the adoption of alternative measures that provide effective protection to all persons involved in underground coalmining Safety and Health in Mines International Labour Office,1993

Safety and Health in the Iron and Steel Industry International Labour Office,2005 The practical recommendations in this publication reflect the changes that have taken place in the iron and steel industry over the last 20 years or so and changes to the ILO s approach to developing codes of practice A leaner flexible more highly skilled workforce new technology and a less prescriptive more systems oriented approach to addressing safety and health are reflected in the revised Code It is intended to provide guidance to ILO constituents and all those responsible for addressing safety and health throughout the iron and steel industry The general provisions of the Code cover general responsibilities duties and rights the legal framework safety and health management reporting recording and notification of work related injuries and diseases ill health and incidents and health services Guidance on industry specific prevention and protection includes furnaces and ovens foundries handling molten material rolling mills and coating lines and recycling There are also sections on competence and training personal protection emergency preparedness and welfare Annexes to the Code include workers health surveillance surveillance of the working environment occupational exposure limits and chemicals used in the iron and steel industry This code replaces an earlier code that was adopted in 1981 Safety and Health in the Use of Machinery, 2013 Safety and Health in Building and Civil Engineering Work International Labour Office, 1972 Considerable thought has been given in this code of practice to the differences that exist in building and civil engineering practices in both developed and developing countries and to the need both to improve poor practices and to establish good practices where none exist today The provisions of the code should therefore be read in the context of conditions in the country proposing to use this information the criterion followed throughout however has been that these provisions represent the minimum that should be observed The scope of the code is wide ranging among the 41 topics examined Safety and Health in Opencast Mines International Labour Office, 1991 Opencast mines may not be as dangerous as underground mines but they should respect a wide range of provisions in order to minimise safety and health risks to workers and people living nearby This code is intended for people responsible for occupational safety and health in opencast mining Prevention of Accidents Due to Explosions Underground in Coal Mines International Labour Office, 1974 Code of practice comprising occupational safety guidelines for preventing underground explosions in coal mining covers ventilation gas detection fire control dust control etc Safety and Health in Coal Mines. Code of Practice International Labour Organization, 1986 The coalmining industry has always been considered the most hazardous of the major industries in view of the natural conditions in which the work is carried out and the considerable difficulties involved This code of practice has been prepared to help those responsible for improving standards of safety and health and to provide guide lines for the drafting of safety and health regulations for the coalmining industry It contains provisions on general safety and health measures specific measures for work underground road and shaft driving coalgetting transport and so on and procedures for the control of dust firedamp fire and other hazards Local circumstances and technical facilities will determine how far it is practicable to follow these provisions Code of Practice on Safety and Health in Open-case Mines International Labour Office, 1990 Draft Code of Practice on Safety and Health in Opencast Coalmines, 2017 Safety and Health in the Use of Machinery International Labour Office, International Labour Office. Programme on Safety and Health at Work and the Environment, 2013-11-26 Part I of the code sets out the scope objectives hierarchy of controls and definitions as well as the general obligations responsibilities and duties of the competent authority designers and manufacturers suppliers and employers workers and their organizations Part II deals with technical requirements and specific measures that should be taken in order to protect workers safety and health The Code should be used to ensure that machinery is designed and constructed in such a way that it is safe for use and fits the purpose for which it is intended Employers should use it to assess whether machinery they select and use or modify is fit for purpose and suitable for the specific working environment and conditions Because the state of the art may change over time enabling more effective measures to be provided designers and manufacturers and employers should always refer to current specific guidance The application of the code at the national and enterprise levels should be pursued as part of comprehensive occupational safety and health programmes and systems seeking further guidance from relevant ILO instruments

Draft Code of Practice on Safety and Health in Open-cast Mines ,1990 Code of Practice on Safety and Health in Opencast Mines International Labour Office,1990 Code of Practice on Safety and Health in Underground Coalmines International Labour Office. Sectoral Activities Programme,2006 Abstract Code of Practice for the Prevention of Accidents Due to Explosions Underground in Coal Mines ,1973 Code of practice for the prevention of occupational accidents due to underground explosions in coal mining covers occupational safety precautions to be taken underground
