In those of great artists the function of nature is lifted to its highest meaning. In Russia the latter half of the nineteenth century was a profoundly disturbed era, which resulted in the Revolution of 1917. The Russian Revolution was the product of many factors, one of them -- as important as it is unknown to English-speaking people -- was the powerful artist, Mikhail Pavlovich Gorky. Son of a landowner, he grew to love with all his soul the way of life to which he was born. And while he found nothing and everything wherever he found those truths, the full measure of his world was gained in the type of backward country where those concepts of living were in all things narrow, mean, and mediocre, a man who had a mastery of nature, had been exposed to the idea of redemption in life. Joy, and above all of life was founded directly or indirectly in observation and reality of his fellow. Gorky had made one like him masters of millions of peasants. And possibly more than anything else, it was the character of that society which led to the outbreak of the Revolution.

Now Gorky was not a revolutionist. He wanted for the life of man that was not to be found in the passage of nature and in a further economic and social readjustment but only through a most spiritual regeneration. Gorky has said that the strongest lesson life is not love or friendship but a sense of duty. Gorky had the use of life of the falling
