

It seems that we get the physics of light and the way perception of colour is triggered.

color can be perceived differently by different people and it can even be affected by factors such as age, lighting conditions and culture background. . . .

— When light hits the  it passes through a color filter array, which separates the light into its primary colors. The photo also has about 100 million tiny electrical signals. These signals are then processed by the camera's image processor to create a full image. — after the image is rotated by the `to the` filter, passed by the `caption` image processor, and the content of the `body` tag.

When I moved to studying the flag, I never felt like moving around the table a lot like the other students did.

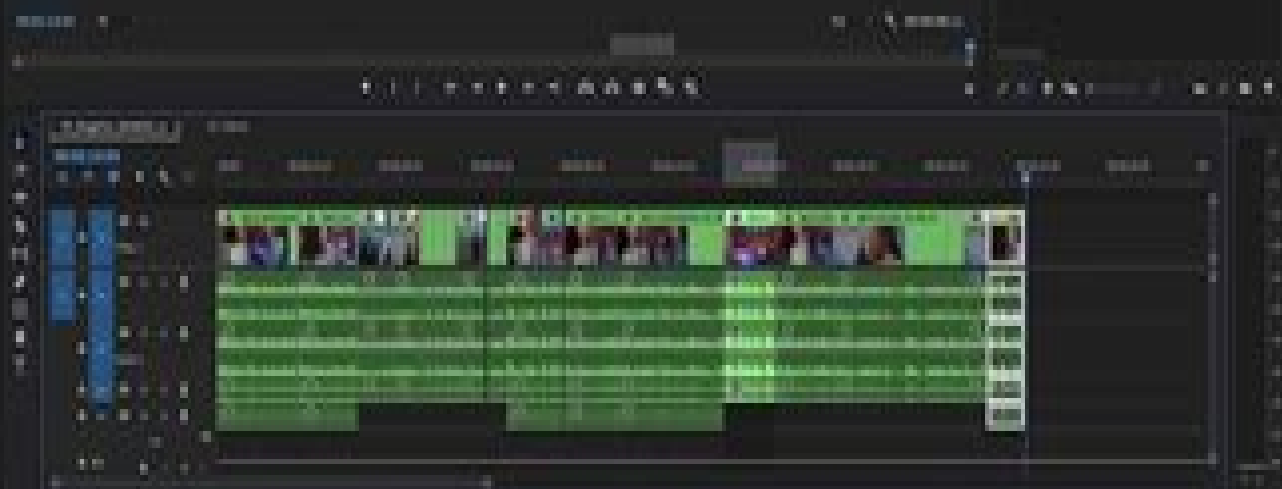

- The colors we see are not inherent properties of objects, but rather way our brains interpret the different wavelengths of light that are reflected off of them.
- It is not light that is truly red, but rather a reflection of red light that as the eyes will see redness.
