

Agnès de Brunhoff

Backstage mysteries of body and mind:

our infinite potential for psychophysical
blossoming in performance

Agnès de Brunhoff is an artist of many talents – singer, pianist and composer – who now works as Alexander Technique teacher and coach to distinguished singers, instrumentalists and actors. She has worked all her life applying her talents and largely divine artistic experiences as her impressively reflective version of the Alexander Technique. This richly varied and original career, her profound understanding of what it takes to make an artist, allied to her unflagging devotion to research, combine to make Agnès de Brunhoff the infinitely valuable and internationally renowned coach she is.

This, Agnès de Brunhoff's second book, goes further than her initial presentation, in her book On Stage, of her artistic approach and her method of applying the Alexander Technique to her teaching and artistic practice. It is a call to arms: we must urgently rethink our relationship with our body, as a partner as much in our work in music and on the stage as in our everyday life. We must act to protect ourselves in today's all-encompassing, ever-accelerating, ultra-material, consumerist society...

This book describes Agnès de Brunhoff's fascinating career, guiding those who have come to her to help them connect with their true artistic identity, be that the mind, vocal or instrumental. It describes the tools she has developed over decades of research with artists, working out what they require in order to blossom.

This book addresses the oft ignored need to take time – the time required for us to connect with our deepest self. It takes a new look at the artist in today's world, and presents an innovative approach to education.
