

Myth, allegory and Michel Tournier*

RACHEL EDWARDS University of Hull

One of the major problems encountered when dealing with the subject of myth is the question of definition. The twentieth century has seen a widespread use of the term in areas of research ranging from psychology to anthropology. In a sense, myth has become a scientific tool, a key to the myriad ways in which we define ourselves and the world around us. This can clearly be seen by considering the way in which myth is used by some of the most eminent writers and thinkers of the twentieth century. Freud employed myths in the form of ancient tales to identify fundamental psychic structures and conflicts, while Jung found in these myths or tales a rich store of enduring archetypes expressing the deep needs and yearnings of the human psyche. In his anthropological work, Claude Lévi-Strauss concentrates extensively on the narrative structure of mythic tales and stories, finding in them evidence of a universal human logic, that of story-telling as a means of resolving fundamental tensions or contradictions. In Mythologies, Roland Barthes uses the term myth as a means of understanding the universalizing claims of mass culture. For Barthes, myth is a narrative that seeks to conceal its own history and pass itself off as natural. In the field of literature, what is commonly referred to as a "return to myth" took place at the end of the nineteenth century and the beginning of the twentieth century. Myths here consisted of reference to ancient literature, most notably that of ancient Greece and of the Bible. In the modern text, these old stories served primarily to illuminate social, psychological and metaphysical aspects of modern life. After 1945, however, in France at any rate, some respect was lost for myth as a means of codifying experience, and novelists such as Alain Robbe-Grillet set about challenging mythological significance. This is clearly seen in Robbe-Grillet's Les Gommages, which is an artful parody of the Oedipus legend. The effect of this was, of course, that in trying to undermine the status of myth, Robbe-Grillet actually succeeded in keeping myth very much in the foreground of literature. This changing relationship concerning problems of myth is a constant undercurrent of modern literature. Michel Tournier is perhaps France's most

Tahar Ben Jelloun Ruth Amar,2005 This study is an analysis of elements that build the narrative strategies of Tahar Ben Jelloun's work On formal and thematic levels the narrative sequence and its interwoven strands manifest a story in perpetual becoming in constant dissolution and evolution In fact the story is an infinite quest It is told and repeated in various manners with no possibility to be exhausted This continual quest of the story is nourished by a lack expressed by the needs of the post colonial Maghrebien novel for compensating a world that was but is not any more However this lack conditions the production of the story The text nourishes itself from the lack it produces We could say then that Ben Jelloun s novel is not the production of a story but the emphasized production becoming itself Story it is not the story that is told but the story of its production On the one hand this study redefines Ben Jelloun s narrative strategies on the other hand it focuses on the importance of the perpetual becoming in all the aspects manifested in his work reflecting the difficulties of its hybrid nature the function of the symbolical writing the construction of characters and their contribution to the fragility of the story the revelation of generative forces of a form and its rupture Although other novels are taken into account the focus of this study is on central texts like L ecrivain public Moha le fou Moha le sage Harrouda L enfant de sable La nuit sacree La Reclusion solitaire Les yeux baisses
