Loret, 1961 A design envelope is established as the result of a human factors analysis of the artificial gravity environment peculiar to rotating space vehicles The envelope is prescribed by an upper limit on vehicle angular velocity of 0.4 radian second to minimize the occurrence of canal sickness a basic upper limit on artificial gravity of 1 g and a basic lower limit on artificial gravity of 0.2 g as the lowest value of g at which man can walk unaided Both g limits are modified to compensate for Coriolis forces which cause variation in g level for tangential walking inside the rotating vehicle An upper limit on vehicle radius of 180 feet is established on the basis of engineering practicality The optimum vehicle configuration is established as a Modified Axially Expanded Dumbbell characterized by a single cylindrical living working compartment oriented parallel to the spin axis counterbalanced by other vehicle components The configuration is illustrated in the conceptual Pseudo Geogravitational Vehicle which has a radius of 180 feet and an operational angular velocity of 0.4 radian second to produce 0.9 g in the living working compartment Author Air University Quarterly Review, 1953
