Empire and Poetic Voice Patrick Colm Hogan,2012-02-01 In Empire and Poetic Voice Patrick Colm Hogan draws on a broad and detailed knowledge of Indian African and European literary cultures to explore the way colonized writers respond to the subtle and contradictory pressures of both metropolitan and indigenous traditions He examines the work of two influential theorists of identity Judith Butler and Homi Bhabha and presents a revised evaluation of the important Nigerian critics Chinweizu Jemie and Madubuike In the process he presents a novel theory of literary identity based equally on recent work in cognitive science and culture studies This theory argues that literary and cultural traditions like languages are entirely personal and only appear to be a matter of groups due to our assertions of categorical identity which are ultimately both false and dangerous

flagrantly unequal political economy not primarily concerned with material production or productivity they glorified static conceptions of original cultures and identities whether religious ethnic or other and justified inequality as cultural difference In contrast to the popular mobilizations which powered developmental nationalisms cultural nationalisms thrive on neoliberalism's disengagement and disenfranchisement albeit partially compensated by the political baptism of newly enriched groups Extremist wings of cultural nationalism in some countries were a function of this lack of popular support This book was published as a special issue of Third World Quarterly
