

Rachel's Promise

A photograph of a cobblestone path leading through a dark tunnel towards a bright exit, with two figures walking away in the distance. The path is made of irregular cobblestones and is flanked by dark, textured walls. The tunnel is arched, and the light from the exit creates a strong contrast with the dark interior. Two small figures are visible in the distance, walking away from the viewer towards the light. The overall mood is mysterious and hopeful.

Mastroyannis, 2003-03-05 Rachels Promise is both a family saga and the story of Rachel a poor and violated young woman To defend the justice of her cause which is also a promise to her mama Rachel must take on the powerful and legendary Raskin family that's famous for its dynasty of York the largest motion picture studio in Hollywood But to take vengeance on the rich and famous Rachel must either kill them or rise to their level of power and fight them from their vantage ground When she realizes she cannot kill she launches a career in filmmaking under the most adverse circumstances On her way she comes across people with flawed personalities a hazard that's inherent in the nature of the transparent make believe world of the film land Rachel refuses to become another Hollywood casualty though she comes very close Powered by strong will and purpose she triumphs over the tremendous odds against her Still a total satisfaction does not occur from laurels of fame and wealth but from fulfilling her promise

Liberalism and Affirmative Obligation Patricia Smith, 1998-11-26 The scope of affirmative obligation is a point of contention among liberals Some see affirmative obligations required by social justice as incompatible with a strong commitment to individual freedom The task before the moderate liberal is then to consider what a consistently liberal view of affirmative obligation would have to be in order to accommodate liberal commitments to freedom and justice and also account for long standing institutions that are central to liberal democratic society In this book Patricia Smith argues that this can be achieved by reconstructing the liberal doctrine of positive and negative duty She offers a careful consideration of these elements of liberal principles as they relate to affirmative obligation Through an innovative analysis of the institutions of family and contract Smith develops the idea of duties of membership as preferable to natural duties to explain family obligation and as needed to supplement contractual duties to explain professional obligation This idea is then applied to the problem of justifying political obligation She argues that membership obligations implied in cooperative endeavor must supplement obligations of consent that are central to liberal theory This is deftly illustrated through a state of nature theory that includes community membership eliminating atomistic individualism while maintaining consonance with what Smith calls cooperative individualism The resulting view of liberal individualism is consistent complete and capable of handling long standing liberal institutions while taking seriously the demands of affirmative obligations Smith's clear articulation of a liberal view of affirmative obligation finds a middle ground on this polarized topic with compelling and reasoned implications for liberal political philosophy Her discussion will interest students and scholars of legal and political philosophy and political science
