Price Structure and Network Externalities in the Telecommunications Industry Atsushi Iimi,2007 Many developing countries have experienced significant developments in their telecommunications network Countries in Africa are no exception to this The paper examines what factor facilitates most network expansion using micro data from 45 fixed line and mobile telephone operators in 18 African countries In theory the telecommunications sector has two sector specific characteristics network externalities and discriminatory pricing It finds that many telephone operators in the region use peak and off peak prices and termination based price discrimination but are less likely to rely on strategic fee schedules such as tie in arrangements The estimated demand function based on a discreet consumer choice model indicates that termination based discriminatory pricing can facilitate network expansion It also shows that the implied price cost margins are significantly high Thus price liberalization could be conducive to development of the telecommunications network led by the private sector Some countries in Africa are still imposing certain price restrictions But more important it remains a policy issue how the authorities should ensure reciprocal access between operators at reasonable cost

Utilities Reforms and Corruption in Developing Countries Antonio Estache,Ana Goicoechea,Lourdes Trujillo,2006 This paper shows empirically that privatization in the energy telecommunications and water sectors and the introduction of independent regulators in those sectors have not always had the expected effects on access affordability or quality of services It also shows that corruption leads to adjustments in the quantity quality and price of services consistent with the profit maximizing behavior that one would expect from monopolies in the sector The results suggest that privatization and the introduction of independent regulators have at best only partial effects on the consequences of corruption for access affordability and quality of utility services
