Redesigning American Education:

Redesigning American Education James Coleman, Barbara Schneider, Stephen Plank, Kathryn Schiller, Roger Shouse, Huayin Wang, 1999-02-19 Drawing on several principles of sociological theory James S Coleman and his colleagues construct a new design for American schooling The authors present compelling evidence on the deficits of our educational system compared to other countries arguing that the problems are the result of inappropriate incentives for teachers students and parents Asserting that most American school systems are driven by administrative needs the authors propose school designs that would shift the focus to student achievement output as the driving force behind public education The move from an administratively driven system to an output driven system would require the use of external standards a method of evaluating school and student performance gains over time a means of rewarding students teachers and parents for academic performance gains and the encouragement of informal norms that would support the new educational goals Basing their recommendations on two national longitudinal data sets each with a sample of over 1000 schools exhibiting variations in organizational design the authors identify specific variations that have been shown to promote growth and achievement

Redesigning American Education James Coleman, 2018-03-08 Drawing on several principles of sociological theory James S Coleman and his colleagues construct a new design for American schooling The authors present compelling evidence on the deficits of our educational system compared to other countries arguing that the problems are the result of inappropriate incentives for teachers students and parents

Redesigning Schools Joseph P. McDonald, 1996-11-22 For five years McDonald charted the progress of ten schools in the Coalition of Essential Schools as they immersed themselves in the hard work of school reform He also visited many other schools both elementary and secondary in an attempt to understand serious school reform and its prospects He concludes that school reform requires redesign in three critical areas The first is a shift in the ordinary and often tacit beliefs of the people who work in schools the communities that support them and even the children who attend them The second area which McDonald dubs the wiring arena involves internal communication and power arrangements The third area called tuning involves connecting the school to the needs interests and values of the communities it serves

Hallinan, 2006-11-24 The aim of the Handbook of Sociology of Education is to present the most theoretically grounded and empirically rigorous sociological analyses of schools to date The authors are distinguished researchers in the field Their contributions to the Handbook offer major theoretical perspectives on the schooling process and describe significant empirical studies of schools and their effects on individuals and society The research presented in the Handbook is built on three fundamental tenets of sociology First the authors adopt the perspective that schools are a central institution in society An understanding of the function of schooling in social life is enhanced by viewing schools as interrelated with other societal institutions The study of how the context of schooling influences education processes is critical to an understanding of school outcomes Rather than being determined solely by ascribed and achieved characteristics an individual's cognitive and social development are influenced heavily by the structures and networks in which the individual is embedded Communities families schools and social groups are critical elements in the educative process By viewing the school as a societal institution and highlighting the interaction between context and individual behavior the Handbook chapters provide a broader and deeper understanding of the determinants of learning in contemporary society The second sociological insight that guides the research in the Handbook is that the school is a social system
