A New Eocene Primate Genus, Cantius, and a Revision of Some Allied European Lemuroids Elwyn Laverne SIMONS, 1962

Alpha Taxonomy of Eocene Primates from the Great Divide Basin, Wyoming Dakota Renee Pavell, 2021 The identification of the alpha taxonomy of an extinct species is the first step towards understanding its evolutionary history and relationships with other organisms Alpha taxonomy refers to the initial classification of the specimen based on the analysis of the observable morphological traits Traditionally paleoprimatologists paleobiologists and paleoanthropologists have conducted morphological examinations via visible observations or with the use of a microscope However technological advances have resulted in the ability to accurately examine and describe small structures that have been historically difficult to study This project used a micro computed tomography CT scanner to examine the dental morphology of eleven Nothartcine primates including ten specimens from the genus Cantius and one specimen from the genus Copelemur Scanned images were imported into Avizo a three dimensional visualization software to generate digital reconstructions The digital reconstructions were used for further morphological analyses to aid in the identification of the taxonomic classifications of the study specimens The three dimensional reconstructions of the specimens support the existing alpha taxonomy of the Nothartcine primates The employment of the CT scanner revealed small variations in the dental morphology of the study specimens which may be attributed to inter individual differences dental wear patterns or evolutionary changes through time

Schwartz, 1983 Studies on the Earliest Primates George Gaylord Simpson, 1940 Primate Evolution and the Environment Christophe Soligo, 2007 Understanding evolutionary processes requires knowledge of the context in which specific events took place including the chronological and the environmental contexts Contributions to this special issue of Folia Primatologica highlight the importance of an accurate chronological context for interpretations of the origins of primates and of their response to the onset of Cenozoic global cooling They discuss the influence of palaeogeography and climate change on the first appearance of primates in the fossil record the evolution and dispersals of the Miocene apes and of early representatives of the genus Homo the Old World monkey radiation and primate visual signalling Also considered is the effect humans are now having on the course of primate evolution as seen in recent megafaunal extinctions in Madagascar and as exemplified by the complexity of parameters involved in informing future conservation strategies The broad taxonomic chronological and methodological scope of this publication creates a valuable overview of the diversity of environmental parameters involved in shaping primate evolution. It encourages new perspectives and highlights important areas for future interdisciplinary research in evolutionary primatology.
