Horror films now make up a significant proportion of all British films. This is the first book to recount in detail the making of one such film, Legend of the Werewolf, and covers every stage in the production cycle, from finance and choosing the actors through shooting and editing to publicity and distribution. Much of the story is told in the words of those who took part in the filming, including director Freddie Francis, star Peter Cushing and producer Kevin Francis. It thus provides valuable first-hand evidence of the way British films are actually made in the 1970s.
