Paddy Irrigation And Water Management In Southeast Asia:

Paddy Irrigation and Water Management in Southeast Asia Edward B. Rice, 1997-01-01 Jordan's health sector performs well in terms of access and health outcomes which rank among the best in the Middle East region and among other middle income countries. An estimated 80 percent of Jordan's population has formal health insurance coverage. This country study provides a detailed description and analysis of the strengths and weaknesses of Jordan's current health care system. It describes the kingdom's health care financing and delivery system and provides a conceptual and empirical policy basis for health care reforms. The study also analyzes options for universal health insurance coverage and estimates the impact of costs with a health sector financial impact model. Tables, figures, and case studies help illustrate the overall analysis. The Rice-Wheat Cropping System of South Asia Palit Kataki, Suresh Chandra Babu, 2001-06-04 The lives of more than a billion people depend on the answer. This valuable book surveys the problems of the rice-wheat cropping system practiced on the Indo-Gangetic Plain. IGP Introduced at the time of the Green Revolution, it transformed agriculture and produced thirty years of bumper crops. The Rice-Wheat Cropping System of South Asia: Efficient Production Management offers scientific analysis of the aftereffects of this intense cropping. The Rice-Wheat Cropping System of South Asia: Efficient Production Management focuses on the questions of soil depletion, pest infestation, and soil alkalinity as elements of declining productivity. Along with clear charts, maps, and graphs, it provides practical suggestions for improving and maintaining the productivity of this irreplaceable farmland. The Rice-Wheat Cropping System of South Asia looks at the problems that have arisen for both the rice and wheat phases, including depletion of micronutrients, degradation of major nutrients from unbalanced fertilization practices, infestations of nematodes, increasing soil alkalinity as a result of irrigation. It also suggests solutions for maintaining productivity, including integrated pest management, sustainable agriculture, micronutrient fertilizers. This informative book and its companion volume, The Rice-Wheat Cropping System of South Asia: Trends, Constraints, Productivity, and Policy, are essential planning tools for agronomists, policymakers, and agro-economists. It is also a useful reference for anyone interested in the problems of famine and intensive cropping, not only in South Asia but in the world. Producing More Rice with Less Water from Irrigated Systems Luis Catasús Guerra, International Water Management Institute, 1998 Over the past decade we have witnessed a growing scarcity of and competition for water around the world. As the demand for water for domestic, municipal, industrial, and environmental purposes rises in the future, less water will be available for agriculture. But the potentials for new water resource development projects and expanding irrigated area are limited. We must therefore find ways to increase the productivity of water used for irrigation. This paper reviews the literature on irrigation efficiency and on the potential for increasing the productivity of water in rice-based systems. It stresses the continuing confusion over the concepts of irrigation efficiency and water productivity. It identifies the reasons for the wide gap between water requirement and actual water input, both irrigation diversions and rainfall in irrigated rice production systems, and discusses potential opportunities for increasing water productivity both on farm and at the system level Based on the reported low farm and system level irrigation efficiencies the potentials for water savings in rice production appear to be very large But we do not know the degree to which various farm and system interventions will lead to sustainable water savings in the water basin until we can quantify the downstream impact of the interventions Studies on the economic benefits and costs and environmental aspects of alternative interventions are also lacking This paper emphasizes the need to measure the productivity of water at farm system and basin levels and to understand how the productivity at one level relates to the productivity at another Without water balance studies to measure productivity at these different scales it is not possible to identify the potential economic benefits of alternative interventions and the most appropriate strategies for increasing irrigation water p productivity in rice based systems Water Management in Irrigated Rice B. A. M. Bouman,2007

Integrated Crop and Resource Management in the Rice-wheat System of South Asia Jagdish Kumar Ladha,Yadvinder Singh,2009 Sustaining crop water productivity in rice-wheat systems of South Asia: A case study from the Punjab, Pakistan Waqar Ahmed Jehangir,Ilyas Masih,Shehzad Ahmed,Mustaq Ahmad Gill,Maqsood Ahmad,Riaz Ahmad Mann,Muhammad Rafiq Chaudhary,Asad Sarwar Qureshi,Hugh Turral,2007-04-23 This working paper presents the results of the Pakistan Component of the Rice Wheat Consortium Project on Sustaining the rice wheat production systems of Asia Rice and wheat crops are main nsources of human food and substantially contribute to feeding livestock The advent of the green revolution in the 1960s resulted in a tremendous increase in the production of these two cereal crops and the rice wheat cropping system emerged as a very important source of food supply in South Asia Recent symptoms of stagnant growth rates in productivity and the degradation of the resource base pose serious challenges to future food security and natural resources management in the region The growing scarcity of water in the region Rice Research Strategies for the Future ,1982 Addressing Resource Conservation Issues in Rice-wheat Systems of South Asia ,2003 Agricultural Development Policy Roger D.
