Money and economic growth J.J. Sijben, 2012-12-06 In monetary theory the paramount problem posed by many economists was always whether monetary variables had a certain influence on the real variables in the economy so that money would not be neutral but influence the economic process In this way the outcome would differ from that of a barter economy The outcome of this development was that money could no longer be regarded as an accommodating item like in many out dated text books but as an autonomous factor the influence of which is explicitly analyzed When after the Second World War the real side of economics developed into growth economics it was quite natural that efforts were made to integrate both lines of thought so that the effect of the rate of increase of money on the rate of growth of real national income could be studied Dr Sijben gives the full and thorough story of these efforts in a way that enables economists to compare the different approaches more easily than was possible up to now More specifically the various models are made comparable by the use of the same symbols for the same variables all over the book After the introductory chapter Tobin s outside money model in a neo classical framework is discussed What is income in this respect Tobin argues that real disposable income is real net national income plus the real value of the increase in monetary balances

Finance, Growth and Democracy: Connections and Challenges in Europe and Latin America in the Era of Permacrisis

Dimitris Katsikas, Maria Antonieta Del Tedesco Lins, Andrea Ribeiro Hoffmann, 2024-10-31 The present volume uses a comparative regional approach to analyze how permacrisis, an extended period of instability and insecurity, has been experienced and dealt with in the European Union (EU) and Latin America. Written by academicians and policy experts from both regions, the volume has three main objectives. Firstly, it critically evaluates the response of regional organizations and governments in the EU and Latin America to the crises that have shaken these regions in recent years. Secondly, chapters contribute to a better understanding of the promised benefits and risks of digital currencies and fintech, more generally to economic growth, financial stability and inclusion. Finally, the volume promotes an understanding of the challenges of permacrisis in both the EU and Latin America as well as encouraging their cooperation at the multilateral and bi-regional levels. Providing an interdisciplinary perspective, this volume will be of interest to researchers and students of international relations, international political economy, international finance and economics, international law, global governance and regionalism, as well as public officials of ministries of foreign affairs, finance and the economy, public officials of international and regional organizations. This is an open access book.

Improving International Capacity

Development J. Armstrong, 2013-05-07 Nothing is more important to a new fragile or developing nation than developing the capacity of its government to support national well-being. Every society is complex, every government is complex. Yet well-intentioned international development aid, born in an era of infrastructure projects, continues to apply simplistic technical solutions to these wickedly complex development problems. It's an outside-in approach that rarely succeeds, even by the development industry's own admission. But out there, amongst the billions of dollars of failed interventions, there are bright spots of success, places where capacity is harnessed not just for today but for tomorrow too. What is working so well? Drawing on research practical experience and stories of success Jim Armstrong explores these emerging approaches A Neo-Keynesian Theory of Inflation and Economic Growth S. Irrigation and Drainage International Commission on Irrigation and Drainage,Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations. Land and Water Development Division,Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations,2004-01-01 The consensus among policy makers in the developing world and aid agencies is that a lack of capacity is constraining the development of irrigated agriculture Although this concern is not new it is now receiving much attention in the irrigation and drainage world where it is becoming an issue in its own right rather than being embedded in infrastructure investment projects In order to address this issue FAO Land and Water Development Division AGL organized a one day workshop which brought together a range of case studies from different parts of the world in order to demonstrate that capacity development should be central focus of future strategies on irrigation and drainage This publication contains a synthesis of the workshop as well as three keynote papers prepared for the workshop based on the available literature and experiences The complete workshop materials which include several country papers and complementary documents are included on a CD ROM that accompanies this document Capacity Development for Education for All Faccini, Benedict,Salzano, Carmela,2011-12-31
