Protecting Paradise Dave Hansford, 2016-08-22 New Zealand's native wildlife is in crisis It's being slaughtered by pests and we need to intervene more frequently more comprehensively and across a broader front than we currently are if we are to protect our mainland populations of our native wildlife The use of 1080 remains our best option to combat pests in the medium term As techniques have become more refined in recent years the results from the aerial application of 1080 over significant areas of the conservation estate have been spectacularly successful in maintaining populations of native birds Plus it offers the best balance of environmental safety affordability and effectiveness Yet the use of 1080 attracts fierce opposition from a small group of vocal and passionate opponents This book examines their arguments and conclusively shows that the science put up by 1080 opponents is unsubstantiated The idea that our native forests are silent i.e. that 1080 kills native birds because of 1080 drops is also unsupported by research while their other major claim that trapping could entirely replace 1080 is simply not practical Dave Hansford believes that opponents of 1080 who are concerned about the ethics of spreading poison across the land have a valid argument and should be given an audience He is however deeply concerned by other vested interests for example some in the hunting lobby who want more game animals to shoot and are prepared to put that before the survival of our native wildlife He argues that it is time for New Zealanders to take a stand and to come to the defence of their wildlife If you care about our natural heritage but are confused by the 1080 issue then this is a book you must read before kiwi and kereru and other iconic birds are a thing of the past on mainland New Zealand

Averting

Catastrophe Cass R. Sunstein, 2021-04-27 Best selling author Cass R Sunstein examines how to avoid worst case scenarios The world is increasingly confronted with new challenges related to climate change globalization disease and technology Governments are faced with having to decide how much risk is worth taking how much destruction and death can be tolerated and how much money should be invested in the hopes of avoiding catastrophe Lacking full information should decision makers focus on avoiding the most catastrophic outcomes When should extreme measures be taken to prevent as much destruction as possible Averting Catastrophe explores how governments ought to make decisions in times of imminent disaster Cass R Sunstein argues that using the maximin rule which calls for choosing the approach that eliminates the worst of the worst case scenarios may be necessary when public officials lack important information and when the worst case scenario is too disastrous to contemplate He underscores this argument by emphasizing the reality of Knightian uncertainty found in circumstances in which it is not possible to assign probabilities to various outcomes Sunstein brings foundational issues in decision theory in close contact with real problems in regulation law and daily life and considers other potential future risks At once an approachable introduction to decision theory and a provocative argument for how governments ought to handle risk Averting Catastrophe offers a definitive path forward in a world rife with uncertainty
