The phenomenon of hospital readmissions of psychiatric patients has been a matter of concern ever since the concepts of 'deinstitutionalization' and 'community care' of these patients have been emphasised. There is evidence from the literature that readmission rate is increasing substantially (Rosenblatt and Mayer, 1974; Kirk and Therrien, 1975; Rollin, 1977). A number of investigators have studied relationships between psychiatric patient's characteristics and readmissions (Lorei, 1964; Russell and Anthony, 1973; Discipio and Sommer, 1973; Hogarty et al., 1974), in order to understand the phenomenon of readmissions. In general the findings have varied considerably. While the literature from the Western countries is extensive, there is no report from India on the problem of readmissions. It may be too presumptuous to believe that the similar socio-economic and clinical variables are operative in the frequency and patterns of readmissions in India as are reported from the West.

AIMS

The present investigation was carried out with the objective of studying the socio-economic correlates and the reasons for admissions of readmitted patients as compared to the patients admitted for the first time in a general hospital setting.

MATERIAL AND METHODS

All the patients admitted to the psychiatry ward of PGIMER Chandigarh during the year 1977 including both the first admissions and readmissions to the same unit prior to the present (index) admission formed the study group. At the time of admission a form was filled up for all the admitted cases giving the reasons leading to admission and the problems in out-patient's management of each case. Information about the socioeconomic characteristics and diagnosis was taken from the case resources. Decision for discharge is taken by the consultant incharge of the case keeping in view its clinical condition, social functioning and also the purpose of admission.

Description of the Unit :

This inpatient unit is a part of the Nehru Hospital attached to the Postgraduate Institute of Medical Education and Research. It has 24 beds (22 general and 2 private) and is equipped with advanced biochemical, neurological and psychometric investigations facilities; draws patients from a wide catchment area; serves as a referral hospital for the region as well as treats patients coming directly to seek help. All admissions are voluntary. No patient is admitted under compulsory orders. It is an open ward with no provision for single cells or locked
