

SENSITIZATION (PSYCHOLOGY)

Sensitization is a psychological process where repeated exposure to an event or stimulus leads to increasingly intense psychological or physiological responses.

DEFINITION

According to Clark & Martin (2019), sensitization is:

“...a learning process in which repeated administration of a stimulus results in the progressive amplification of a response” (p. 7).

Both animals and humans can experience this phenomenon, which is marked by a heightened sensitivity or responsiveness towards the same stimulus over time.

EXAMPLES

PTSD: Those with this disorder may become more sensitive to things that remind them of the traumatic event. They may have stronger reactions when exposed to similar reminders.

Phobias: Someone with a phobia may become increasingly anxious when exposed to their feared stimulus repeatedly
