

ScriptureFonts: A Review

TODD J.B. BLAYONE

WordPerfect is like the English language; it is often arbitrary and inconsistent but it has virtually become the lingua franca of the word processing world. About sixty percent of people doing word processing are using WordPerfect.¹ For office and corporate use, WordPerfect is among the most powerful, feature laden programs available today. However, for some complex academic applications, WordPerfect provides meager support.

One such application is the processing of foreign characters. Access to Western European characters via alternate keyboards is not supported by default. Users requiring frequent access to such characters are forced to go through the laborious process of designing their own keyboard. While non-Roman character sets (e.g., Greek, Hebrew and Cyrillic) are provided, a satisfactory means for entering, displaying and printing these character sets is not.²

Rest assured that the prospects for WordPerfect users to enjoy painless non-Roman text manipulation with acceptable printed results is not entirely bleak. For example, if biblical languages are required, Zondervan Publishing's ScriptureFonts offers a solution. With the right hardware and software combination this package brings full Greek and Hebrew support to WordPerfect 5.0/5.1.

What are the system requirements for ScriptureFonts? First, either WordPerfect 5.0 (dated later than January 1989) or WordPerfect 5.1 is required. Second, only EGA, VGA and the Hercules Graphics Card Plus or Hercules InColor Card are supported.³ Standard Hercules Graphics or CGA cards are not.⁴ Third, dot matrix printer support is provided for Epson FX and LQ models, Toshiba 321SL, 341SL and 351SX models and a variety of Panasonic models, some which need a memory upgrade.⁵ Printers that provide true emulation compatibility with these printers are also supported.⁶ A full range of Hewlett-Packard laser printer drivers are included along with PostScript Greek and Hebrew fonts. Finally, a hard-disk with between 350K and 2MB of free space is required.⁷
