wasn't really scared until they lifted me from my horse. They didn't touch me but they seemed to control everything. I floated from my horse and I felt nothing. I think if they were intending to kill me they would have already. I counted nine of them whatever they were. I could see they were moving towards the circle and as the circle got closer I could just make out a door opening. I could see through the circle as if it were made of glass. As I was taken into the circle I could see many more of them. They were using some kind of flashing table squares. Every time the squares changed colour they used one of their arm type things to touch the square to change it. I floated further along and could see many more of them using squares on the wall. Just past the squares on the wall I started moving sideways and ended up on a table. I still couldn't move any part of my body. They removed my gun belt. The belt just undid itself and laid out on a side table. In the end I had all my clothes removed. None of them touched me. It was as though my clothes had a mind of their own. □□ qi longpantian, 2025-01-22

Plays Georg Kaiser, 2018-01-01 In From Morning to Midnight the cashier downtrodden victim of the capitalist system turns bank robber in order to test the power, freedom and happiness that money can bring. His grand gesture of setting himself and others free turns into an odyssey of disillusion and ends in his violent death. The unique stage technique employed by Kaiser is as challenging today as it was when the play was first performed. The Burghers of Calais has always been considered Kaiser's greatest play and the classic of Expressionist drama. In it Kaiser exploits the non-naturalistic technique of Expressionism. The play embraces vast expansiveness and total concentration, stylized gesture and lengthy monologues.
