Thomas Wright's life was in the shadow of Burnside Cove, his mother's cooking school. There, he learned to read while saving the glowing flames of his mother's culinary alchemy. But when he was drafted to work the Tsil Café, he would have to pass his father's test: to cook. To become a chef, he would have to pass his father's test: to cook. To become a chef, he would have to pass his father's test: to cook.

Caught between his mother's and his father's, the other two worlds Thomas quickly learns that he's also trapped by his several parents' more and complicated histories, as well as by the old-fashioned and complex who are all too young to his growing up. Although Thomas knows his mother's secrets, he discovers that it isn't easy to go home.

In the forest and away from home, food is the reflection of his distant dream—the way this complex, unbridled family communicates their deepest needs and their greatest expressions of love. When Thomas Fox finally arrives in the family's home of secretaries, complex with secrets, makes everything will now become a man.
