(Emily Ferguson), 2016-06-23 Unlike some other reproductions of classic texts 1 We have not used OCR Optical Character Recognition as this leads to bad quality books with introduced typos 2 In books where there are images such as portraits maps sketches etc We have endeavoured to keep the quality of these images so they represent accurately the original artefact Although occasionally there may be certain imperfections with these old texts we feel they deserve to be made available for future generations to enjoy

Guidelines for Producing Quality Longleaf Pine Seeds

James P. Barnett, 2002 Longleaf pine Pinus palustris Mill seeds are sensitive to damage during collection processing treatment and storage High quality seeds are essential for successfully producing nursery crops that meet management goals and perform well in the field Uniformity in the production of pine seedlings primarily depends on prompt and uniform seed germination early seedling establishment and a variety of cultural practices that are applied as the seedlings develop The best collecting handling and processing methods maximize performance attributes and reduce the need for extensive nursery cultural practices to compensate for poor seed quality Guidelines are presented that will help seed dealers orchard managers and nursery personnel produce high quality longleaf pine seeds and improve the efficiency of nursery production
