Burns, Marina Novelli, 2008 In the current trend of increasing globalization relationships are evolving between global and local realities rich and poor regions of the world and old and new leisure and tourism patterns The tourist has become an active agent in their travel experiences moving between and among multiple localities in an environment of transnational interconnected social networks In order to understand the modern tourist concepts of mobility have begun to be applied to tourism studies and have questioned whether the word tourism is any longer sufficient to describe the complex socio political milieu of people on the move Bringing together theoretical and practical issues this edited volume analyses tourism's wider role as an agent for the mobile modern population of the world.
