Midnight Fear:

A Wall of Two Henia Karmel, Ilona Karmel, 2007-10-08 Buchenwald survivors Ilona and Henia Karmel were seventeen and twenty years old when they entered the Nazi labor camps from the Krak w ghetto These remarkable poems were written during that time The sisters wrote the poems on worksheets stolen from the factories where they worked by day and hid them in their clothing During what she thought were the last days of her life Henia entrusted the poems to a cousin who happened to pass her in the forced march at the end of the war The cousin gave them to Henia s husband in Krak w who would not locate and reunite with his wife for another six months This is the first English publication of these extraordinary poems Fanny Howe s deft adaptations preserve their freshness and innocence while making them entirely compelling They are presented with a biographical introduction that conveys the powerful story of the sisters survival from capture to freedom in 1946

The Thirteenth Door: Rites of the Forgotten Coven Jamie McBride, 2025-10-15 Deep in the woods far from the safety of prayer and reason stands a door that should never have been found Weather beaten and marked with strange sigils it waits in silence for those who dare to test its threshold They say it was sealed by a coven so ancient their names have rotted from history bound with blood and words too old for any living tongue to break But now the bindings are unraveling and a new generation drawn by obsession and greed will cross into rites meant to stay buried Behind the thirteenth door something patient and unspeakable has been listening for centuries and it is hungry to be remembered This is not a place of safe spells or candlelit charms but a shrine to lost promises and bargains paid in terror Whispers call through the hinges luring the curious to witness a power that will twist their souls until they cannot return to themselves As the last veil of protection frays shadows gather to reclaim what was once theirs and the rituals that made the coven vanish will demand new sacrifices In the creeping dark each step echoes like a final heartbeat because once the thirteenth door is opened it does not close willingly and neither will you
