Barlow,Diane Bolger,Barbara Kling,1991 Prehistoric Cypriot ceramics were widely traded especially in the late Bronze Age and constitute an important source of information about international trade and cultural relations in the Bronze and Iron Age eastern Mediterranean These papers were presented at an international conference held at the University of Pennsylvania Museum in October 1989 Symposium Series II University Museum Monograph 74 Nestor's Wine Cups Michael L. Galaty,1999 The primary intent of this research project is to improve anthropological understanding of the structure of the Mycenaean state of Pylos through archaeological reconstruction of the Late Bronze Age regional ceramic production and exchange system using methods of petrographic and chemical analysis In addition to its primary goal it also encompasses several secondary goals First regional settlement data collected by survey projects in Greece strongly encourage comparison of Mycenaean to other archaic states. Parallels are thus drawn whenever possible and general questions of state origins and organization are addressed. Second study of the Pylian ceramic industry is interesting and informative in itself and results can be compared to ceramic manufacture and exchange in other parts of the world at different times and levels of social complexity. Finally this research integrates classical approaches to Old World archaeology with anthropological approaches to the study of complex societies.
